The continent of Africa is one of the most warlike continents – there's always a war or several wars there. Angolan people, for instance, don't seem to remember what living in peace is like. They've never experienced peaceful life for long. From the 16th century up to 1975. Angola belonged to Portugal and was its overseas territory. The fight for freedom never stopped but when independence was gained at last, an intense civil war broke out.

The main opposing forces were UNITA, which stands for National Union for the Total independence of Angola a MPLA – The People's Movement for the Liberation of Angola. These two political parties were originally founded to free the nation from Portuguese colonial rule. However, after independence was declared, their military confrontation subjected Angolan people to further suffering. Officially, the civil war was considered to be over in 2002, but the country is still being torn apart by major and minor conflicts.

The Music for All Ages

(by James Clarke)

The Beatles changed the style of popular music in an unbelievable way and caused a new musical phenomenon in the Sixties. Their music was fresh and original. It has stuck with generations of people and is still an influence on pop and rock bands to this day.

They became a worldwide sensation. They wrote about day-to-day subjects, mainly love, which everyone could relate to. They touched the hearts of millions of people with songs such as "Hey Jude", "Love me do", "Help" and "Michelle". Their songs were simple and catchy but also very technically composed with strong classical influences.

The Beatles were also the first "Boy Band" who was very well-presented, dressed in suits and good-looking, which made them very attractive to ladies of all nationalities.
